

Summary

Subject Matter: Formation of the German verb (historical aspect)

Author: student of the 8-th semester Ohman Yanina Gennadyvna

Supervisor: Mirzahanova A.E. PhD, Docent of the Chair of the German Language and Professional Communication, Pyatigorsk State linguistic University

Topicality of the: research determined by the need of deep and detailed study of dynamic processes in the German verb at all stages of its development

The Task of the research:

- Examine the theoretical literature on the origin and development of strong, weak and irregular German verbs
- trace the development of the grammatical structure of the German language
- explore the historical and linguistic conditions of formation and development of the system of the German language
- describe the paradigm of strong, weak and irregular verbs in Old language
- trace the development of German verb in the next stages of the history of German

The theoretical significance of the research: is that its results can help solve common problems associated with the historical development of the German language

The practical significance of the research: is the ability to use information and results of research in theoretical courses on the history of the German language, theoretical grammar, as well as special courses in diploma and course work

The results of the research: German as the language of the Germanic and Indo-European system inherited from the basic features of Indo-European language status. On the basis of this system evolved features that gradually changed the language and created a new type of structure, the further development of which constituted the evolution of the German language area. Already in the Old High German verbs represented a harmonious system of strong, weak and irregular verbs, preserved up to the present time with some modifications due to the mainly fixation stress on the first syllable of the root and the final vowel reduction.