

Summary

Subject matter: Category of «Target» in polylogical verbal interaction

Author: Rechenko Alexandra Alexandrovna

Supervisor of studies: Ayrapetov Gurgen Eduardovich

Information about customer organization: chair of French language and interactional linguistics

Topicality of the research: due to the increasing interest of modern linguistics to the study of language through its function in speech. It should be noted the prospect of work in linguistics such domestic and foreign linguists as AN Baranov, V. Gak, F. Jacques, C. Kerbrat-Orekioni, F. Recanati

Objectives of the research: identifying the major components influencing the development of verbal interaction

Tasks of the research: to identify the main factors influencing the success of communication; to determine the significance of role positions of participants in the verbal interaction; analyze polylogical interaction and to identify the main purpose of the communication

Theoretical and practical significance: to develop a basis for further study of the problems of communication in terms of studying linguistics polylogue in other languages, as well as typological studies. The practical value of the work is to develop models and algorithms polylogical verbal interaction necessary for the analysis of discourse polysubject

Results of the research: in reviewing the structure of the roles and functions of the communicants set range of contexts, their points of occurrence in a given situational context. They are closely associated with markers that help the participants to choose a particular role position to implement their own plans and goals.

After analysis, it became apparent that there is a basic factors that influence the development of communication: the participants, the code, the situation and purpose